I oppose the NAB's petition seeking to prohibit satellite radio providers from including locally-oriented content. The content of most broadcast radio is of no interest to me, save for some exceptions offered by NPR affiliates. It is the lack of content that makes broadcast providers not competitive, not the inclusion of locally-oriented material in satellite programming. That the broadcast-frequency license holders are suffering in competition with satellite providers is their own responsibility, and the FCC should not artificefically restrict the marketplace by adopting the restrictions sought by the NAB.
